Medication Information

Medication is an important part of many people's lives. When injured or ill, it becomes even more important. Life-saving medications given by Paramedics may not work well with some medicines you may be taking. Paramedics need to know what medications you take.

Emergency responders need to know what medications you are taking. Your medical situation may not allow you to gather your medications during an emergency and searching your home takes valuable time.

Keep a current list of your medications available and in an obvious place. Your list can be posted on the refrigerator, in your kitchen, or in an easy to find place. Leave instructions for family members so they can assist if they are available.

Consider cards to serve as a gathering place for your medical information. While any card will do, these brightly colored cards are easy to spot and recognize. Most important is having this information on hand. Be sure to update them often, or as needed.
